The PhD programme in Law is articulated in three different addresses: Constitutional Justice and Fundamental Rights - Economic and Public Law - Private Law. The PhD course in Legal Sciences pursues the overall aim to allow an excellent postgraduate education to young scholars who intend to improve their preparation through the acquisition of scientific methods and criterions applied to Law.

The teaching of the curriculum of Private Law consists of lectures, seminars, presentations of books, conferences and discussion meetings and seminars in which the same PhD students discuss their research topics or perform interventions. The teaching covers the major issues of private law and European private law and emphasizes the analysis of interdisciplinary issues, in coordination and in collaboration with other curricula of the school.

Some lessons are performed in English.
