The PhD programme in Law is articulated in three different addresses: Constitutional Justice and Fundamental Rights - Economic and Public Law - Private Law.

The PhD course in Legal Sciences pursues the overall aim to allow an excellent post-graduate education to young scholars who intend to improve their preparation through the acquisition of scientific methods and criterions applied to Law.

The teaching of the curriculum of Public and Economic Law covers the major issues of public and administrative law, economic law, environmental law and comparative law, with references to European law. The activities emphasizes the analysis of interdisciplinary issues, in coordination and collaboration with other curricula of the school.

The teaching is divided into cycles of lectures, seminars, organization and participation in conferences, book presentations, individual meetings and collegial discussion on the research activities of PhD students. In carrying out these activities is required the active participation of PhD students, which required the preparation of reports or articulated questions.

Some activities are performed in English.
