Overview and objectives of the PhD course:

The doctoral studies aim at developing the students’ aptitude for research in the covered fields of law, by offering lectures and seminars as well as encouraging both individual research and discussions with professors belonging to the doctoral board. Students are free to specialize in one of the mentioned field of law. A key role in the offered doctoral education is played by the interdisciplinary method, the internationalization and the comparative analysis. Therefore, there will be lectures on contemporary, general topics of common interest among the different fields of law, according to the interdisciplinary approach. The division in different curricula (Private Law, Labour, Legal European Tradition; Theory of fundamental rights, Constitutional Justice, Comparative Law; Administration, Market and Criminal Justice) aims at integrating, developing and completing the common lectures, by developing specialized knowledge based on the specific skills of the academics involved and their long-term experience in doctoral education.
